The Demand

Tomorrow, before you act on your gut, separate instinct from judgment: name the read in one sentence, check it against better information than you currently have, and test it against the actual ceiling of what's possible, not just what's familiar. Build this discipline before the moment you desperately need it to already be built.

The Work

Recall the last moment you walked into your building and knew something was off before you could name it:
Name the read in one sentence:
Check it against better information than you currently have — what would you need to look at to confirm or deny it?
Test it against the actual ceiling of what's possible, not just what's familiar:
The discipline you will build this week so this reading capacity is already developed before you desperately need it:
