The Demand

Before you finalize tomorrow's big decision, run all three lenses: argue against yourself as your harshest external critic, then defend your own internal logic, then reconcile the two into a third position. The ceiling on what you can see doesn't disappear — but running all three lenses is how you actually see it.

The Work

Name the big decision you are about to finalize:
Lens 1 — Devil's Advocate: argue against yourself as your harshest external critic. What do they see that you're missing?
Lens 2 — Defend your own internal logic. Why did you actually arrive at this decision?
Lens 3 — Reconcile the two into a third position. What does the reconciled view look like?
What running all three lenses revealed that running just one would have missed:
