The Demand

Before tomorrow's shift fills every open minute, protect one block of time deliberately and ask what you'd see if you actually had space to look. Activity Crowding is a structural condition, not a personal failing — if you don't design the pause, execution will consume all of it by default.

The Work

Name one block of time this week you will protect deliberately, before the shift fills every open minute:
What is Activity Crowding currently burying that you haven't had room to ask?
What moved recently — the market, the Guest base, the cast dynamic, competitive pressure — that you haven't had time to register?
The one question you would ask if you actually had space to look:
How you will design the pause instead of waiting for it to happen on its own:
